INTRODUCTION

Accurate laboratory diagnosis is an essential first step in the management of parasitic diseases, both at the level of the individual patient and the community.

Microscopy is a mainstay in laboratory diagnosis. However it requires a high level of expertise to ensure reliability.

The new powerful tools of biochemistry, immunology and molecular biology complement microscopic diagnosis.

This 5-day intensive course on diagnostic parasitology aims to review, update and strengthen the knowledge and skills of health professionals involved in teaching, research and diagnostic work dealing with parasitic diseases.

COURSE OBJECTIVES

- ✚ Identify the important morphologic features used in the identification of parasites and medically important arthropods;
- ✚ Perform various laboratory procedures used in the diagnosis of parasitic infections for clinical and research applications;
- ✚ Demonstrate specific methods and procedures for collection, preservation and processing of parasitic specimens; and
- ✚ Understand the latest concepts regarding the epidemiology, diagnosis and quality assurance, treatment and control of parasitic infections.

COURSE DESCRIPTION

- ✚ Intensive laboratory-based course
- ✚ Lectures/discussions, video and film.
- ✚ Core activities are:
 - Individual work with parasite specimens
 - Hands-on diagnosis of common protozoan and helminthic infections.

TOPICS

- ✚ Soil-transmitted Helminths
- ✚ Directly Transmitted Parasites
- ✚ Food- & Water-borne Parasites
- ✚ Vector-borne Parasites
- ✚ Intestinal Protozoans
- ✚ Immunodiagnosis
- ✚ Quality Assurance in the Diagnosis of Parasitic Infections
- ✚ Arthropods of Medical Importance

WHO SHOULD ATTEND

- ✚ Medical and paramedical staff involved in the diagnosis and/or management of parasitic infections
- ✚ Teachers, researchers and students involved in or with an interest in medical parasitology
